"Never mind about Patsy," laughed ! Crawford. "She has to stay at the theater; she's chorus leader and can't leave till it's all over, because the chorus is on till final curtain fall. Then it will take her some time to dress and join the old people, and it will be nearer midnight than 11 by the time they reach your flat, even if Mallory takes them straight there. All you will have to do will be to put a handkerchief around your head, as if it were aching, and say you left because you felt ill. No one will ever be the wiser. And you won't be telling a tib either when you say you were feeling it? What's the difference whether you lunch with me in a restaurant or have supper with me here?"

Nora felt there was a good deal of difference, but she said:

"I don't know." "There Isn't any," he decigred, with an accent of conviction and finality. Rogers entered and spread a snowy cloth on the little table, which he placed in front of the fire. Then he brought in a tray laden with the repast and the bottles of wine.

"Oh, you mean supper's ready," said

"That's what," he answered. "But your majesty had better sit on this higher chair. You'll be more comfortable. And, here, give me your cloak."

"No. I'll keep it on, thank you," she said.

"And catch your death of cold when you go out-no sirree," he retorted playfully, taking hold of it and trying to unhook it.

She resisted and retreated from him. "Mr. Crawford," she declared, "I'm not going to take it off."

"But you must," he urged. "It isn't polite to dine with it on. Ladies never do such a thing." "I don't care," she said decisively.

"I'm not a lady, only a chorus girl, and I'm going to keep it on, and if you don't behave I'll go away this minute and never come here any more."

He saw it would not do to insist. "The slave of the ring obeys," he drawled, crossing his hands on his breast with a comical look of resignation. "I'm a good boy, 'as meek as digestin' deacons be at ordination din-

This made her laugh, and they sat down to the table.

"Isn't it jolly to be together like this? I wish you could come often," he said. "It would be nice," she admitted. He poured out the Margaux.

"I dote on these good red wines," he observed. "They are like rubles. They glow with concentrated heat and sunshine. They are a poem of warmth and love and beauty-the warmth and beauty of southern climes, where they know how to love. See how entrancing its color is."

Silver City, N. M., March 22,-Six more gold-silver bricks have been shipped in from the Socorro Mines company's property in the Mogollon mountain. The six bricks are probably worth $12,000. Regular shipments will be made every week from now on.

The mines which are being operated by the company are known as the Little Fannie and Champion, being on the same vein, and are immense contact fissures between quartzite and porphyry. The mines are developed to a depth of 700 feet, and at that depth, the vein of pay ore is 30 feet in thickness and averages in gold and silver $25 per ton-

At present only 20 stamps are dropping; but very soon the mill will be run to its full capacity, which is 30 stamps, 150 tons of ore will be treated every 24 hours, and the production will be $50,000 per month. The mines have now 000 per month. The mines have now blocked out over three years' run of ore
